This new addition to the award-winning war in the East adds a number of new and challenging battles to your collection of Eastern Front scenarios. Events that unfold in the Mediterranean, Egypt, Italy and Western Europe force your soldiers to make decisions that they would never make in a normal battle. The entire sky over Rome and its environs is now filled with squadrons of German bombers heading for the Alba airbase. On your front in France and North Africa, British fleet raids on warships and transports have become more frequent. All you can count on in a fight with British airmen is small hurricanes coming in to attack from a strafing flight. In another theater of operations, in Western Europe and North Africa, the enemy uses jeeps, armored vehicles, armored personnel carriers and even tanks against you! Enemy warplanes also often appear in the air, which cannot but cause concern. If these objects are surrounded by dense anti-aircraft fire, they can be destroyed. It should also be taken into account that the German troops are successfully advancing towards the English Channel, and, perhaps, their attack on England will soon be possible. You must be prepared for this. To enter this area, you will have to operate in an unfamiliar environment, in conditions of complete uncertainty. The enemy can appear where and when you want. He can attack your troops on all fronts at the same time. And none of your preparations will be able to help you hold out against the enemy until he detects you and shoots down a plane or collects information about your actions on the ground. Be sure to anticipate any combat situations and develop a plan to deal with them. And the last. Of course, the operation against Britain would be much easier if you could prepare the situation on your front in advance and could use your superiority over the enemy forces. However, in such a situation, a sudden encounter with an enemy with superior numbers is possible only if you have planned actions against this enemy in advance. Perhaps you will be surprised by the fact that our type of weapon - machine guns - was purchased from the Germans. The German weapons, which had not previously been used in combat, quickly proved themselves to be extremely effective in ground battles. Our aviation uses it with great success. The present moment is significant in that you are the only one in a position to wage war on Germany. You will face an enemy that has waged endless wars throughout its history - wars in which people die
