I generated a plot to plot the predicted y-values vs the actual y-values, so that I could visually confirm my model. I also fitted the following model:  $\text{lm}(y \sim \text{as.matrix}(\text{pred\_matrix}) + \text{some\_other\_matrix})$  If I understand my data correctly, it implies that:  $\text{as.matrix}(\text{pred\_matrix})$  is composed of the coefficients (standardised to the standard deviation of the dependent variable) multiplied with the respective independent variables. If this is correct, I would assume that I have to interpret the coefficients as the standardised value of each independent variable in each observation. But my calculations seem to yield the incorrect values for the coefficients. What could be the reason for this? A: Given the statement:  $\text{as.matrix}(\text{pred\_matrix})$  is composed of the coefficients (standardised to the standard deviation of the dependent variable) multiplied with the respective independent variables. The problem is that the output of  $\text{as.matrix}$  is a matrix, not a vector. This means that, when calculating the regression coefficient, you have to
