The human CD8+ T cell response to HIV envelope glycoprotein (gp120) was investigated in human peripheral blood mononuclear cells from healthy uninfected individuals. Two CD8+ T cell clones which restricted the recognition of peptides derived from the glycoprotein of murine leukemia virus (MLV) and human immunodeficiency virus (HIV-1) were isolated. These T cell clones recognized HIV-1 gp120 in the context of HLA-A2, and peptide-pulsed T2-MHC class I- deficient cells as measured by cytotoxicity or interferon (IFN)-gamma production. The T cell clones recognized HIV-1 gp120 peptides in the context of HLA-A2, and the immunodominant peptide was deduced to be a linear epitope from residues 126-134. These CD8+ T cells are also likely to be involved in protective immunity against HIV-1.Tissue responses to experimental rhinovirus infection in a cystic fibrosis mouse model.
