Description:XLOCF is a tool that extracts Exchange Active Directory information from a Windows XP system. It supports both UNIX and Windows. XLOCF is a GUI tool that automatically runs when the Exchange server is started (powersaving mode). It provides a universal interface and minimal additional user interface. Description:P2P (Peer to Peer) file sharing applications allow individuals to share Internet access with each other. This provides an economical alternative to dial-up Internet access. P2P clients can share the bandwidth utilized for Internet connection, regardless of the computer's Internet access speed. P2P applications can be classified into two categories: UPnP and NAT Port Forwarding. Description:p2p.py is a full-featured Python-based peering/routing/sharing/bittorrent/chat client. Can connect to almost any type of P2P network. Can be used to connect to UPnP servers. It supports PEX, PXF, and PXS formats. In the PEX format, user who is the sharer controls the torrent. It is easy to create and open multiple shares, or disconnect/reconnect. Description:The easy-to-use, easy-to-implement, easy-to-install, and highly efficient application design is unique for multi-client, and multi-server application development. Description:ChainSMS is a complete free alternative to Wammu, Windows Mobile or Symbian which allows you to easily synchronize contacts, calendar, tasks and to send SMS from your computer to your cellphone. Description:SMS chains with XML messages are a kind of agile text messaging that allows individual to send text messages to large number of people, simply by entering the phone numbers. This makes SMS a useful communication tool among a large number of people. Description:P2P Proves to be very easy to use by a wide range of users. Every user can set their own high-quality quality ratio, or the rate at which the quality of a file is reduced as it is transferred over a network. The ease of use does not come at the expense of other P2P features such as these. Description:Implementing a p2p file sharing system is a bit complicated. Here are the problems we face: 1. Join or not, is it efficient? 2. How to scale efficiently? 3.
