The Family Tree of Family is a practical application that helps you create your family tree as well as learn about your predecessors and relatives. It features a user-friendly interface, alternative options for the display of the genealogical line, an intuitive engine and powerful searching functions.Since 1968, artists in the Center City Arts District, which stretches from the Barnes Foundation to the University City campus, have had unrestricted access to a community-wide arts program called Center City's Project 21. "Project 21"—formerly "Project Comp," a joint-venture with local public agencies—was organized to help its members be more visible, productive, and accessible to the community. By encouraging artists to organize themselves, co-op their efforts, and collaborate with each other—on the model of community organizations such as local labor unions—the program offers artists a unique chance to meet and identify with their neighbors. In addition to offering an unparalleled opportunity for artists to interact with the public, Project 21 aims to create a climate of collaboration among members and between members and the community at large. Through exchange projects (such as previous annual co-op exhibits), service projects (such as cleaning up the streets after an outdoor event), cultural projects (such as local performances and participatory workshops), and many more, members can participate in ways that strengthen their work and extend the reach of their efforts. Because the artists and their community partners are "working together" on a near-daily basis, artists in Project 21 become familiar with the inner workings of both the arts and the community. Running under a 12-year, $4.3 million grant from the Center City Arts District, Project 21 has turned the Center City arts district into an entirely unique and stunningly accessible community of artists and their neighbors. In addition to the 2.5 mile stretch from the Barnes Foundation to the University City campus, Project 21 has completed a 2,500-square-foot arts co-op in University City, a performance hall and residency facilities at the Barnes, and a building that contains studios for all three of the project's contributing artists groups. On the artwork front, members have organized nearly 70 exhibitions and produced nearly 150 works. Project 21 is able to offer artists the opportunity to sell their work in a market setting, and to present the work of other local artists through gallery exhibitions and a "Gallery Café" (a restaurant-style venue). Project 21 also has created numerous programs for children and youth, including after-school art-making programs in local schools

I was delighted that the shapes then reappeared as you'd expect and I could also simply drag them into place where I wanted them. "The Family Tree of Family is a utility designed to help you build your family tree and extend the families into generations after the most recent known ancestor. The application is built around the concept of layers. While a single layer is usually limited to one generation, it is possible to structure your family tree so that different layers may span multiple generations, or to differentiate between children and parents within a generation. This is achieved by simply adding layers of information to a family member. For example, you can create a family tree for your own family with a generation for your grandparents and parents as well as a leaf for you as a young child. You can also add your children as well as other grandchildren and great-grandchildren, with each additional generation indicated with a new layer. A family tree is accessed via the built-in family tree viewer. Each
