(36.05K likesâ€)Americans might not follow their president around the globe with a security detail, but that doesn't mean they don't keep a close eye on the commander in chief — at least as much as they can. To find the most surveilled people on the planet, WalletHub compared more than 180 countries across 25 key indicators of national surveillance, based on answers from the public about police use of surveillance cameras, computer hacking, fingerprinting, DNA collection and GPS tracking. Here are the most and least surveilled countries on Earth: 1. China Don't Edit China's face recognition systems are used disproportionately, with an estimated 20 million people caught in the system, according to the Asia-Pacific Privacy Commission. A 2016 report from Human Rights Watch found that facial recognition technology was being implemented across the country to surveil the population and track those with "endemic problems" such as Tibetans and Uighurs. Staying in shape is also a necessity, as the country's mandatory official physical testing is consistently ranked as one of the most surveil he death penalty. Don't Edit 2. North Korea faces from the United States, its people are constantly under the watch of its notorious secret police, the National Security Agency (NSA), and cyber security. While the country has a total of 485 acri ve pacification cands that aren't even stored in the national database. Don't Edit 3. Saudi Arabia has the highest level of government surveillance of any country in the world, followed by the United Arab Emirates, where the use of face recognition software increased by seven-fold between 2007 and 2016. However, the United Arab Emirates already had the highest level of d0c515b9f4
