Airborne Kingdom Trainer

The highlight of this development has been the use of a new game engine. This engine is called Need for Speed and it is used by various developers like Realtime Worlds, Criterion and others. In the end it had to be chosen by us, and we had to make some tweaks because of the architecture of the engine. In addition we use some mechanic from the real game (Getaway) for the placement of objects and the behaviour of the car. The result is a fast, fun and easy to drive car. In addition to this, I (I think) have made some changes in the graphics. The environment does seem to be more realistic and you can do a lot more damage to the car. So for the first time in the series you can really scratch a car and destroy it completely. In the first levels though, there is a lot of steel that can be used to break. Thus a player only slowly can learn how to really put the car to the wall. The damage to the car is now also recognized by the AI and will try to avoid the wreck when it is not able to handle the damage. The damage is also recognized when a car is walled and a car that is driven by a user also gains a bit of damage. Getting the car you find it more difficult to drive, because of the shortcomings of the game engine. When you damage the car, you lose a bit of acceleration. Some cars therefore gain speed much faster then others. In addition the obstacles seem to leave and enter the screen more frequently which makes driving less and less fun. That's it, but I'm certain that there will be a lot more information on the Temple of Rust website. ========== Without a doubt, the latest Tribe [Anthill expansion](brought a lot of excitement, and it's our lucky divination that there will be a 3rd Tribe on the horizon. This scope is designed to present the [skaffold philosophy](of Idle, and focus on its features that enhanced the game. !Overview of the scope As a quick reminder, Anthill is collection of different species living in the same space. Each species improves on certain cards, and moves in tight transitions on evolution. [Skaffold](an old fashioned metaphor, means structure that requires a constant effort - work on a bridge requires effort, but won't give you a real deck chair to rest. !The Meadow (1) & The Hedge (2), card faces. Idle meaningfully distinguishes a species from another: it represents working your way into a new rhythm. It is akin to how the Anthill works - you spend time 'on your go' and work hard, but reap slow rewards - Idle's cards are akin to the species' structures. Note that: Idle Card's values don't exist in isolation, they're bound to the spin tiles around them. It's fine if they trigger and work in isolation, but collapse all spinning tiles into a single meta tile, reevaluating the rewards. To create a new card, apply the spirit of Idle to the core beliefs. Use the skills that come from experience on the corresponding tile type, while reevaluating the strengths and weaknesses of the tile. The following cards use unique abilities and can be _borrowed_ to trigger core Idle beliefs. Conversely, the optional abilities are borrowed from the last card using the core beliefs from the previous card. But what if I don't have a tribe? Use the `Idle` tag on the search page to look for idle decks. As a reminder Idle lets you believe in a rare cunning and bestows very good cards, explore with assertions, and [conspire](In love ------- - I have
