HDD are prevalent in almost every computer system. The most commonly used type of HDD is the hard disk drive (HDD). A HDD typically includes a magnetic storage medium such as a magnetic disk or magnetic tape on which data is stored by magnetizing the magnetic particles. The magnetic field formed by the magnetized particles is further modified by a magnetic head. The magnetic head serves to detect the magnetic field formed by the magnetized particles on the magnetic media and to translate the detected magnetic field into electrical signals. The signals are then transmitted to a computer and converted to data by the computer. In recent years, the HDDs have been subjected to increasingly rigorous requirements for high capacity, and low-energy, low-noise reading, storing and erasing. The HDDs may employ a head that has a read/write function of magnetic recording. A read/write head is used to read and/or write data from/to the magnetic recording medium of the HDD.Q: Why is my JS slowing down my website?
