Stop apologizing for it, I don't apologize for it, why should you? This used to be a new venue for me, since my startup was a time-sharing, SMPPC (single-user UNIX PPC) service, but it was over 20 years ago and things have changed drastically since then. I used to have one of the bigger publicly accessible colocated systems that was collocated with a Unix laboratory and we also would generate some code on the mainframe. It was one of the first commercial Internet time-share services, so I was an early adopter. My area of expertise is outside of Unix, so I actually had a lot of users who were Unix user. These were both hardcore UNIX systems people (I was the guy in the lab) and their computers kept dying or they just lost interest. But I managed to garner a large UNIX group at the university (mostly people who had Apple IIs) as well as people outside the university. My servers were a mixture of UNIX and Intel-based computers (compaqs, redhat, etc.). I was basically the only non-UNIX guy around and yet I still found a little of the UNIX spirit.
