Q: How can I get Perl to delete a specific line in a file if that line is found? How do I get Perl to delete a specific line if that line is not found? I know I can use undef and do a delete line; but that works only if that line is not found. It does not make sense for me to get $fileContents that does not contain a line. That file is a text file with many lines. I want to delete only a line if that line is found. A: You can't do it in one command. You will need to use a loop, like this one from KennyTM's answer:

```
#!/usr/bin/perl use strict; use warnings; use autodie; open my $fh, '<'; close $fh; foreach my $line (@contents) { if ($line =~ /line-to-be-deleted/) { delete $line; } }
```

 You can shorten it down to a single line with grep and an in-memory substitution, but the technique described above is a good example of code that could be written using this technique:

```
#!/usr/bin/perl use strict; use warnings; use autodie; my $old_contents = '<'; open my $fh, '<'; close $fh; $old_contents =~ s/line-to-be-deleted/&&print; A: This script finds the line you want to delete, creates a new file containing a list of all lines in the file, and then removes the line by using the unlink command. The my %table variable is a hash containing every line in the file

Photo: Anna Kristin Traill Go through any art museum and chances are you'll find a piece of art that would strike a chord with a particular genre of pop music. From Marilyn Manson's cover of Beach Boy's "Killer Queen," to songs based around the music of Jimi Hendrix and Led Zeppelin, there seems to be a common thread that runs through the realms of classic rock and pop. The influence of these two genres, in some cases, is quite literal: The members of Pearl Jam have said that they admired the guitars of Hendrix while writing Vedder's name on a pyramid on the cover of Ten. While David Gilmour admitted that he has "spent a lot of time" listening to Led Zeppelin, although not necessarily playing Led Zeppelin songs, while writing his own solo album. And the connection between them can be traced back to Ringo Starr, who spent over half a decade of his life as the drummer for both The Beatles and, later, The Quarrymen, the band that would eventually become The Beatles. In some cases, the influence goes even deeper. The Beatles' blues-based, heavier, and more spiritual side can be traced back to the influence of the American blues music of the 1920s and 1930s, the music that Beatles producer George Martin was introduced to through the likes of Howlin' Wolf and Bo Diddley. An article that appeared on Rolling Stone's website has a list of some of the songs that there appears to be a connection between the world of classic rock and the world of classic pop. For instance, there's "Back in the U.S.S.R. (Where You Gotta Go)," a song by The Beach Boys, written by Dennis Wilson and Mike Love (who later formed The Beach Boys). "Can't Help Myself," a song by John Lennon and Paul McCartney (who were later inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame), was inspired by a Bob Dylan song of the same name. "Strawberry Fields Forever," the first track on The White Album, was written by McCartney, although he admits that when it came time for recording, that he and John Lennon had to convince him to write a proper song instead of trying to insert a Beatles tune he'd written earlier into the lyrics.
