This invention relates to stud jigs for installing a stud to a wall in a simple and efficient manner without requiring the user to use the hands and without requiring the user to work close to the stud. In some construction works, it is necessary to install a stud against a wall stud. The wall stud is a term used herein to describe any stud that is used to support a wall or to support other objects. Such a stud is installed by driving the stud against the wall. In other construction works, it is necessary to install a stud at a specified distance from a wall. A stud is installed against the wall at the specified distance by driving the stud against the wall with a hammer and driving tool such as a screwdriver. Both types of installation are carried out in awkward positions. The closest prior art is my issued Australian patent No. 59079. In that patent, there is described a method of driving a stud at a specified distance from a wall. The stud includes a top end and a bottom end, a top flange on the top end, a bottom flange on the bottom end and a center section between the top and bottom flanges. The method comprises striking the top
