Know how critical drebrin is for the actin cytoskeleton and its many morphogenetic functions. Drebrin, originally isolated as an actin-binding protein in brain extracts, has been found to affect cell shape changes, motility, neurite outgrowth, and protrusions. We examined whether drebrin is able to interact specifically with actin structures and, if so, by which mechanisms and with which actin subunits this interaction occurs. We found that drebrin is able to bind actin filaments and bundles in vitro. Drebrin markedly enhances the bundling, branching, and/or straightening of actin filaments. Phosphorylation of drebrin's serine 14 by the mitogen-activated protein kinase p44/p42 MAPK induced the dissociation of drebrin from actin filaments. The actin cytoskeleton of drebrin-transfected fibroblasts showed increased contractility but decreased protraction. Transfection of rat hippocampal neurons also induced a decrease in protraction. We conclude that p44/p42 MAPK phosphorylation of drebrin from actin. Furthermore, the poor protraction of drebrin-transfected fibroblasts and neurons correlates with a disturbed formation of drebrin's actin binding domain, a result of which is also the reduction in contractility.
