Will I get a loan from my company (just enough to cover the cost of living)? If not, what happens then? What if my company shuts down? A: Will I get a loan from my company (just enough to cover the cost of living)? The answer is no, because the loan term is usually short and the interest rate is usually high. It is much more cost effective to give the workers a bonus than loan them money. If not, what happens then? If you don't have money, that means you don't have money to buy things. In that case, yes, you have to cut your expenses down to the minimal level of necessities and live on your savings and Social Security. What if my company shuts down? Optimizing the extracorporeal membrane oxygenation for congenital diaphragmatic hernia. In neonates with congenital diaphragmatic hernia, survival is directly proportional to time of extracorporeal membrane oxygenation. Our current center achieves its 5-year survival rate of 90% on the basis of a protocol designed for survivors of all hypoplastic left heart syndrome patients. The goals of this protocol are rapid extubation, avoidance of thoracostomy drainage, and cannulation of the airway rather than the umbilicus. Our goal is to ensure extubation within 24 to 48 hours of postnatal age. The emphasis on avoidance of thoracostomy drainage is accomplished with a percutaneous-endoscopic technique. We achieved our goals in a subset of neonates with herniation type I. A retrospective review of our pulmonary venous return catheter data (1993 to 1998) was performed to evaluate outcomes of all neonates with congenital diaphragmatic hernia who met our goals for extubation. Forty neonates were extubated within 24 hours of age (1979-1991). Five of 11 neonates who underwent percutaneous-endoscopic neostomy tube decompression survived. Our study suggests that extubation within 24 to 48 hours of postnatal age can be accomplished with a percutaneous-endoscopic technique without increased risk for herniation or pulmonary hypertension.
