ample bass, agt and r2r are all drop dead gorgeous looking soft libraries. they all have a jazzier feel to them and are not as dark as many other soft libraries. if youre looking for that, or a sound thats more focused and a bit edgier, these libraries will definitely deliver what youre looking for. but, theyre also libraries that arent known for being harsh. theyre not quite as warm as something like antares, but im not sure that that is even necessarily a sound that i like either. here is a free, daw-based demo of both of these products. take your pick and try them out for yourself. of course, you should download the free trial of adobe audition 3. i recorded this free demo using their log software (but no destination, they need to add that!). if you dont like what you hear, just return it and they will refund your money. if you like what you hear, then you will receive the. ample sound au3. you will also get a key for the ample sound agt team r2r 2014.01.04 release. next, you will have a 24-day free trial for the ample sound agt team r2r 2015. 2. click here to download the key for that release. 3. you will also receive free updates for both releases for the lifetime of the releases. you can download the free trial of both the ample sound agt team r2r 2014.01.04 release and the ample sound agt team r2r 2015.04 release. 2. click here to download the key for that release. 3. you will also receive free updates for both releases for the lifetime of the releases. if you prefer the look of amples sound agt, youll be happy to know that they have released two mac-only versions of this software. the two that i have here are the ample sound agt team r2r 2014.01.04 release and the ample sound agt team r2r 2015.04 release. 2. click here to download the key for that release. 3. you will also receive free updates for both releases for the lifetime of the releases.

alternate/switchable toms are available. you can switch them out with a different set where the toms have the wire snares switched off. this gives the drums a much more realistic playing sound when the wire snares are on. i like to use a 13" ludwig 7.009 snare for kit duty. either a wood or ceramic sound can be used with the snares. the kit i use for live shows is a 7.009 wood snare with a rye 10" shell. the kit i use for recording is a 7.009 ceramic snare with a rye 10" shell. the high hats can be either a natural cymbal or an exotic metal cymbal. the backing kit is an acoustic ludwig hfx 2e with a 14" bass drum, 18" floor tom, 14" toms, and an 18" snare. the acoustic ludwig drums are an unbeatable value for your money. they are very strong, durable, and responsive. in addition, you get a built-in muffling device that fits around the bottom of the toms to help dampen the sound for recording and live usage. the remo renaissance heads are great with the ludwig kits, and they are comparable to other brands that i own. the trigger-spring tension and rebound characteristics make the ludwig kits seem extremely natural, whereas the dr. z snare heads are firmer and much more aggressive. but they also produce more attack and deeper overtones. the ludwig timpani is a bargain at $35 retail. it works very well. the first is the velella pro-percussion with an 18" bass drum, 12" snare, 18" floor tom, and 4" mallet bells. this is an excellent add-on to a complete kit or a great stand-alone percussion unit. i dont recommend buying the toms alone because they are too soft and mellow. they have the right sound for a small kit, but they arent substantial enough for a full-sized kit. 5ec8ef588b
