in mathematics, a set of points in an n-dimensional euclidean space is a topological basis for a topology of that space. a base is a collection of open sets, each of which has the base point as an interior point. conversely, if a topology is defined by a base, then the base is called the basis. a topological space is a pair (x, t) , where x is a set (the domain) and t is a topology on x (the codomain), which is a collection of subsets of x . we call the subsets closed, open, compact, connected, and discrete, meaning that they are closed under intersection, union, complement, closed under complement, and closed and discrete, respectively. the sound of music is created when a wave of vibration passes into a system containing a medium such as air or water and causes a change in its resonant frequency. the medium can be a string, pipe, human eardrum, loudspeaker, or any other object with internal vibration. sound is created when a wave pattern containing a significant energy amplitude travels through space and changes the resonant frequency of the object it travels through. examples of audible sound are a human voice, water running, wind blowing, and explosions. harmonics are created when a waveform contains a frequency of vibration that is a multiple of the fundamental frequency of the waveform. the highest frequency within a waveform is the fundamental frequency, while the lower frequencies are the harmonics. the condition for the oscillation of a nonlinear system is that there be at least one positive feedback loop. there can be two or more positive feedback loops. this means that every input leads to a change in the magnitude of that input. the magnitude of that change is fed back into the process as an additional input. the input sequence is then repeated, and so on. in most cases, the response will lead to an oscillating, repeating sequence of impulses and/or energy. this is the result of positive feedback.
