The chemicals are used to deposit plating layers onto metal or metal alloy surfaces. In many cases, the chemical plating industry uses electrolytic plating. U.S. Pat. No. 5,891,551 to Rysz ("Rysz") discloses that performance of a plating bath is strongly dependent on pH, the level of chloride and the rate at which acid is added. Rysz discloses that in the case of electrolytic plating, a pH of at least 5 is necessary to produce a pure aluminum layer. Rysz further discloses that a high chloride content facilitates metal deposition. In addition, Rysz discloses that an increase in the amount of acid present in the solution facilitates removal of the plated layer from a substrate. Rysz discloses that it is possible to obtain a higher pH level by removing sulfuric acid which is converted to hydrogen sulfate upon reaction with aluminum sulfate. Rysz discloses the addition of acid is preferably carried out at a constant rate and at a constant temperature. Rysz discloses
