The Ceramicizer plugin makes Photoshop easy to retexture your ceramic plates. Let's start with the basics. Photoshop comes with a large set of pre-defined ceramic plates that fit all sorts of needs. The main use is to apply a special ceramic layer and blending to your final design. What's the difference between these ceramic plates and the tile texture that you find in the marketplace? The ceramic plates in Photoshop contain some displacement, as in tiles, to make them more realistic. However, they are also pre-rendered. Ceramic plates are good for a wide variety of products such as jewelry, tiles, vases, pottery and anything else that requires a plate. They work very well in this Photoshop version. Ceramicizer adds real displacement to these pre-rendered plates that will make them a perfect fit for any design. The plugin contains 6 ceramic plates. These ceramic plates will work well with all the tiles in the Creative Tiling plugin as well. Why retexture your ceramic plates? Not all ceramic plates look the same. Some ceramic plates look nice with one set of color and texture, but with a different set they do not look great. Imagine you are taking a traditional, hand-made piece of pottery and you want to retexture it with your own "inspiration." You start with a new piece of clay, you texturize it, you finish with design it with a few metallic accents. When it's finally done you get your ceramic plate. You're pleased with the way it looks, but you notice something is not quite right. The colors are not quite right and there is something missing from the tile. You spent hours to get that ceramic plate the way you like it, so you would be heart broken if it doesn't look the way you had expected. What you can do is to retexture your ceramic plates and get the look that you had in mind. Ceramicizer can generate tile textures from any images you provide. This means you can transform the piece of art you like to create your ceramic plate without any problem. The way Ceramicizer works is really simple. It generates displacement for every color in the image you are working on. It will also create new colors for all the displacement. If you've ever worked with colors in an image, you will find that Ceramicizer adds a little more to the image when retexture your ceramic plates.
