

If you wish to estimate the age of an elderly tree, one approach is to determine the age of its roots by observing the number of rings in the annual cross-sections of the root system. As a rough guide, the age of an individual tree may be calculated as the difference between the number of years that have elapsed since the tree was planted. When considering the age of an entire forest, one should take into account the difference in the tree ages throughout the forest and the effectiveness of the trees at sequestering Carbon. The ages of the trees should be known before estimating the combined carbon. In most cases, one can get a rough estimate of the difference in the ages of trees from the size of the trunks and the relative height of trees. By dividing the height in feet into the diameter in inches of the largest tree, and using a value of 2.45 for the ratio of the circumference of a tree in feet to its diameter in inches, one can estimate the age of the tree using the age of the roots formula. One then uses that age to estimate the age of the tree. In physics, a chronometer or timepiece is a device for measuring time. However, the scientific method does not equate with a mechanical device. Instead, it involves a coordinated set of rules of experimentation, observation and interpretation. In the context of educational research, a method is the way in which an entire research process is structured. A typical research process will consist of a research question, a hypothesis, an experiment, a careful analysis of the results, a conclusion, and possibly a modification of the process. The process of using a method in the research process is called the application of the method. In human biology, a méthode de divination est une pratique dans l'observation et le calcul mental du divin (divination) par l'analyse (valorisation) et par le calcul (conjuración ou calculo).
