The natural history of prolactinomas: prevalence of growth and escape of amenorrhea at diagnosis and after subsequent treatment. To determine the prevalence and predictors of growth, escape of amenorrhea, and the need for second-line treatment at diagnosis of prolactinomas and after subsequent treatment. All patients who had prolactin-secreting pituitary adenomas diagnosed between January 1999 and May 2004 and subsequently treated with dopamine agonists (DAAs) (n = 77) or surgery (n = 15) were included in a retrospective analysis. The prevalence and predictors of tumor growth and the frequency of escape of amenorrhea after treatment. The prevalence of growth (10%) and escape of amenorrhea (15%) at diagnosis was lower than that reported in the literature. In 50% of patients, amenorrhea was present before DAAs. Elevated basal serum prolactin levels predicted the absence of growth, and larger tumors predicted both growth and escape of amenorrhea. However, growth and escape of amenorrhea occurred in DAAs-treated patients without a prolactin increase or tumor size change. Growth of pituitary adenomas is rare at diagnosis and may occur after treatment. Growth should not be the primary determinant of second-line treatment in patients who have a prolactinoma and are treated with DAAs or surgery.
